SCS TODAY: March 26, 2020
[A late-day, daily update from the SCS Dean’s Office]

TODAY’S TOPICS

— Information/clarification regarding the university’s plans based on postponing May’s commencement was emailed from President Jahanian today. Learn more if you missed it in your inbox.

— Beginning this week, students have been added to the distribution of CMU’s faculty and staff weekly newsletter, The Piper, to help our university community stay connected in this new virtual world. Watch for it in your inbox every Thursday.

— I’ll hold Office Hours via Zoom tomorrow (Friday, March 27), 11:30 a.m. - 1 p.m.

OF NOTE

— In a research effort to understand the spread of COVID-19, AutonLab developed a questionnaire to self report symptoms nationwide. The questionnaire will enable better understanding of prevalence patterns of COVID-19.

— Add your voice: volunteers from everywhere are needed to participate in Rita Singh’s Corona Voice Detect research -- combining recently developed AI and voice forensic technologies to find specific patterns in voice, tone and other spoken sounds that relate to unique illnesses -- to aid in early diagnosis of COVID-19.

TO KNOW

In an effort to share information about our work that may benefit our community and the global community...

— A reminder about the special case of research to combat COVID-19: please contribute to the master, crowd-sourced sheet here.

— Robots could perform some of the “dull, dirty and dangerous” jobs associated with combating the COVID-19 pandemic, but that would require many new capabilities not currently being funded or developed, an editorial in Science Robotics signed by leading academic researchers including Howie Choset, argues.

Until tomorrow,
----- Martial
